

Name:

1 Complete this product description of an internet security program. Type in the missing words using the mixed-up letters in brackets.

EFG

EFG (1) [inta-riuv] software is the only program you need for complete protection from online threats.

EFG scans all incoming and outgoing email attachments, helping to protect your PC against

(2) [rivessu] , (3) [romsw] , (4) [Torsjan] and other types of (5) [lawmare] . A (6) [lawlrife] shields your system from attack by (7) [reschak] , while the program can also detect if a website's (8) [igidlat erctacfti] is out-of-date or suspicious, allowing you to carry out financial transactions online with total security.

In addition to all of the above, the EFG Professional Edition also comes with email

(9) [crynetipon] and the EFG (10) [rawsyep] scanner, helping you to keep your system free of unwanted advertising and (11) [socoiek] .

EFG Basic is available to download as (12) [warfeer] by clicking here. Alternatively, you can purchase the EFG Professional Edition for only £29.95. Click here to visit our (13) [rescue witebes] or pay using PayPal by clicking here.

2 Complete these extracts from wikis about cybercrime by typing in the past simple form of the verbs in brackets. Then decide what kind of cybercrime each wiki is describing. Choose from the drop-down menu.

- In July 2001, the online file-sharing network Napster (shut) its website following legal action from several major record labels.
- In late 2006, a computer worm (take) control of hundreds of pages on MySpace and (change) links to direct surfers to websites designed to steal their login details.
- The first well-known worm (be) the Internet Worm of 1988, which (infect) SunOS and VAX BSD systems.
- A 2007 study (find) that 28% of female internet users had experienced online harassment. In 84% of cases, the incidents (happen) in a chat room.
- In 2008, author J K Rowling (say) that a company trying to publish an online Harry Potter encyclopedia had 'stolen her words'.

Now listen to the extracts being read aloud.